

Grüsse von Deutschland!

Ludwigsburg

Our first post should really be about family as we have so far spent most of our time with them. But today we left our jet-lag behind long enough to visit one of the best palaces in Germany, Residenzschloss Ludwigsburg. As you can see by the pictures, no expense was spared for this palace. With lots of gold trim and priceless history, this tour showed just how overboard one can go on decorating one's home. However, this was not only a place of pleasure, but rather, was home (literally) to 1400 dignitaries and their families while working to make the State a better place. Doing it in style must have sure helped the hours go by! This is one of the best palaces I've seen, but soon we will visit Schonbrunn Palace in Vienna.

Tomorrow we drive to Osterreich (Austria) along with our Uncle Richard and Aunt Freida, pictured above. Tchuss! (pronounced "chew-ss")
