Wien (Vienna)

Café Sperl, dawnning the same décor as it's opening in 1880, has been home to much political upheaval as it was the planning place of those responsible for Vienna's secession. We, however, only enjoyed it's food and coffee; the coffee is rated the best in the world by several publications. We tended to agree.

Taking a cruise on the Donau (Danube), which isn't blue.

With modern and old buildings flanking each side, the St. Stephens Platz and Church is undergoing some renovations. Inside, however, is well kept.

Circumnavigating the trams, railways, and busses is difficult but the only way to get around the city.

Below, Hofburg Palace. Actually, only a fraction of it.

An undisclosed church used by several congregations on the Mexiko Platz.
